

Félix «El Loco», un bailarín entre la realidad y la leyenda

► El libro «Treinta castañuelas para Londres» presenta nuevos datos

MADRID

El 8 de mayo de 1919, la policía londinense detuvo a un joven español después de haber roto los cristales de una puerta de la iglesia de St. Martin-in-the-Fields, en Charing Cross. En el registro de su detención figura su nombre, Félix Fernández García, y su edad, 22 años. Hay también un informe médico del Charing Cross Hospital, adonde se le llevó con varias heridas en las manos; en el manuscrito aparece con un signo de interrogación la palabra «epiléptico» y se habla también de «claustrofobia». Se consigna, igualmente, su ocupación: «Músico y bailarín. Ballet Ruso». Pocos días después, fue trasladado al Horton Asylum, un hospital psiquiátrico situado en Epsom, Surrey, al sureste de Inglaterra. Nunca más salió de allí. Murió en 1941.

Aquel joven ha pasado a la historia como Félix el Loco. Su biografía en el Diccionario Biográfico de la Real Academia de la Historia dice que en Epsom «recibió la visita de Diaghilev, Massine y el pintor Matisse», y que «Massine lo visitó regularmente hasta que estalló la guerra en 1939». Antonio Hernández Moreno, que ha investigado durante veinte años la historia de Félix García —su nombre artístico— lo niega, y señala como el único culpable de su encierro a Sergei Diaghilev, el creador de los Ballets Russes. En «Treinta pares de castañuelas para Londres», Hernández Moreno cuenta, de forma novelada, lo que él denomina como «la verdadera historia del bailarín Félix García y los Ballets Russes de Diaghilev».

La historia conocida

La historia conocida de Félix el Loco cuenta que fue contratado por Sergei Diaghilev, que le habría visto bailar primero en Granada y después en Madrid. Tras viajar con la compañía en una gira por España en 1917, se trasladó a Londres con los Ballets Russes. Diaghilev preparaba el estreno de un ballet español con música de Manuel de Falla, «El sombrero de tres picos», y quería que Félix enseñara al coreógrafo, Léonide Massine, y a los bailarines de la compañía el carácter de las danzas españolas. Se cree que Diaghilev pensaba en el propio Félix para interpretar al Molinero, pero que finalmente se decidió que lo bailara Massine, lo que provocó la locura del español, al que se encontró en la iglesia de St-Martin-in-the-Fields —cuen-
